

APWars Official Disclaimer:

Before buying any game tokens from APWars, please read carefully:

- The game expansion, Arcadia has a specified, clear and defined roadmap to be developed. The vast majority of games (and I dare say they are all like that) have a final version. Of course, we have a lot to develop!
- We use the PancakeSwap framework for liquidity pools. The fact that we use PancakeSwap means that we do not have a brokerage, exchange or dex, meaning that the tokens players trade is from the individual responsibility of each player.
- APWars game assets or tokens are not financial assets. They are assets or tokens intended to be used in game. As with any other game, some players choose not to purchase game items and others choose to purchase and boost their plays, save time or harness convenience. The difference is that with blockchain games everything happens on-chain. Game items, like any token, are also prone to appreciation and depreciation on the market but this speculative feature is not its purpose. Their focus is utility inside the game environment and nothing else. This utility is its tokenomics.
- The use of the token is game-related. That is, APWars tokens are only related to utility tokens with objective use cases and bear no investment characteristics of promises of dividends, guarantees of appreciation, or financial gains of any form. The APWars project, as a whole, is committed to the game and leisure that it provides. Therefore, any relationship that users create between the game and business (beyond entertainment) is also beyond our scope and our responsibilities. From the beginning, the game was created to be a fun environment and offer entertainment. The purchase of assets is also an entertainment-related function because people have always added value to what they like to do and what provides them utility, which is an economics subjective measure - (Please read about the marginal revolution and subjective theory of value).
- We do not commit to any kind of business/profit-oriented communication. We are part of a project that developed a game. And the purpose of the game is to offer leisure and entertainment. We do not control or can assume any responsibility for third parties or any external communication (those that are not carried out through official communication channels) that promises profits or misuse words such as investment. We reaffirm that any communication-oriented by profit and investment does not comply with the APWars guidelines. What we can do, is to clarify with this official positioning that APWars IS NOT an investment protocol in any shape or form, with no promises of gains.

- In order for us to maintain the legal security of the APWars gaming ecosystem, we will not accept game token purchases from IPs locations from the United States of America, Pakistan, Republic of China, Afghanistan or North Korea and any other jurisdiction which prohibits or requires any supervision oversight licensing regulatory compliance, legal compliance, and/or prior approval from any regulatory (or similar) authority or body or form any monetary or securities body.
- Well, what is the final and summarized message of all this? Play for pleasure and leisure! Spend if you need to or if you want more in-game success, but don't see APWars in a financial mindset. Our greatest value is fun! If you have a team, spread this idea, it will promote an alignment between the users and the platform. We can go together with one objective: play a lot. All crypto protocols (physical systems and most of the economic models existent) are structured as zero sum systems. For example the amount of units of value that enters a protocol is exactly the same amount that exits it. So no monetary value is created in this process. Of course, depending on how you play the game you can be rewarded in game tokens based on your game strategy, but that does not mean that the protocol produced a generalized positive financial externality, income or profit. That is why we discourage people to join any blockchain gaming protocol with a financial mindset but otherwise if you are here to have fun while assuming game risks and implementing game strategies APWars is for you!
